This randomized controlled trial is the first to use an evidence-based treatment program for pain-free function for lumbar facet arthritis. The primary objective was to determine whether pain-free function was improved more in the specific self-management program (SG) than in the general physical therapy program (GT) after 12 weeks. Sixty-eight patients were randomly assigned either to the self-management program (SG) or to the general physical therapy program (GT). Ninety-five percent of the SG group completed their study, compared to 65% of the GT. The drop out rate was highest in the SG (25%) versus GT (10%). At 12 weeks, 66% in SG and 12% in GT improved in physical function as scored on the Oswestry Disability Index. Pain as assessed by the VAS improved with 67% in SG and 71% in GT at 12 weeks. Only pain improved significantly more in SG than GT. At 12 weeks, 78% in SG and 50% in GT reported an improved quality of life. This study indicates that a self-management program with weekly case conferences may improve pain-free function in lumbar facet arthritis and reduce the need for medication when compared to a general physical therapy program of 3 group sessions/week.[Effects of divalent cations on glycolysis and energy metabolism of human erythrocytes in a haemolysis state]. The influence of divalent cations  $Mg^{2+}$  and  $Ca^{2+}$  on glycolytic and energy-dependent reactions in intact and haemolysed human red blood cells was studied. It was shown that the content of  $H^+$  ions caused by  $Mg^{2+}$  or  $Ca^{2+}$  stimulation of haemolysis is the main factor affecting glycolysis and energy metabolism. The influence of cations on glycolysis is more pronounced than that of energy metabolism. The cation effect on glycolysis is probably due to direct effect of cations on glycolysis. The cation influence on energy metabolism is probably due to an indirect effect of cations on  $H^+$  ions content which affects glycolysis.San Antonio River Heritage Area The San Antonio River Heritage Area is a Local Nature Reserve in Southam in the ceremonial 3da54e8ca3
